

Poll Shows 85% of Online Daters Are Looking For Sex

An informal poll recently conducted by aLoveLinksPlus.com asking "When posting an online personal ad are you more interested in finding friends, love or sex?" showed an overwhelming 85% of respondents are online looking for sex.

(PRWEB) April 25 2005 -- " When posting an online personal ad are you more interested in finding friends, love or sex?" was asked to the visitors of aLoveLinksPlus.com, an advice and dating portal website.

"Surprisingly almost 85% of the people that answered this 'Quick Poll' told us that they are on the search for sex, rather than making friends or finding love", reported Robert Lee, owner of aLoveLinksPlus.com.

"This Quick Poll featured one of the more important questions since the answer drives home the basics of online dating "What is your goal in using online dating services " Mr. Lee explained.

"Any type of online activity introduces people with similar interests. Online dating doesn't really accomplish that 'on the surface' of the casual user. This vast difference is shown by the goals expressed by our visitors that most are not interested in a relationship at all. People that are sincere in looking for love, rather than sex, know how to find which services to use and how to spot someone that isn't sincere in their approach to meeting for a relationship rather than a 'hookup'."

Quick polls are open to all visitors to aLoveLinksPlus.com and encompass a wide variety of subjects. Although they are not scientifically based "they do offer a fun component to online activity" said Mr. Lee.

Complete results to April 2005 are: (1) Friends 8% (2) Love 7% (3) Sex 85%
